When it came to proving it could be done...

Dana Wright wanted to be a role model for her children. She wanted to show her female co-workers that they could do more and aim higher. She also wanted to enhance her career options. So she went back to school and, supported by a group of strong women mentors, earned a master’s degree in Leadership from Benedictine University. Wright believes the change that has taken place in her life has made her a better employee, friend, wife and parent.

Read the rest of Dana’s story at www.ben.edu/grow.