STUDENT REFLECTION QUESTIONS: THE PERSONAL STATEMENT

When you are interviewed, the interviewer will likely have read your personal statement and your

If you have already written your personal statement, you should obtain feedback about your essay from people whose judgment you trust.

In general, the essay should discuss the situation in which you found yourself, the impact of the experience, and what you learned from it.

If you have not already written your personal statement, you should start with the situation.

Hello, how did it affect you? How did you learn from this experience? Ask yourself: What have I learned about the experience?

The only "C" you got in that will last, but the other qualities are much more important. Be specific and include personal

If you have nothing to say about your experiences or activities, then you need to be explained in detail in your personal statement. If you have a few activities or experiences that you feel need to be explained, include them in your personal statement. If you have anything to say about your family, then include that in your personal statement.

It is wise to limit the number of experiences you choose to write about. Trying to cover all of your
